

VANDERBILT KENNEDY CENTER

Who:

Research study opportunity for typically developing children (6-24 months), autistic children (18-36 months), and children with expressive language delays (18-36 months)

What:

Families attend at least one study visit at Vanderbilt. Children receive assessments of developmental and social communication skills and also participate in play sessions with their parent and watch a short movie.

Why:

Families receive feedback on their child's development and can receive a written report with results, recommendations, and referrals at no cost. Families are compensated for their time and participation in this research experience.

Help us learn about language development in young children with or without autism (ASD) or expressive language delay!

Date of IRB Approval: 03/11/2025
